SATURDAY MORNING .....OCTOBER 6, 1866

DIPPERENT POINTS OF VIEW.
Saith the white owl to the martin folk,
In the belfry lower so grim and gray.
Why do they denfen us with these belief
Is any one dend or born to-day?

a martin peeped over the rim of its nest.
And answered crossly: "Why, ain 't you heard
'that an heir is come to the great estate?"—
''I aven't,' the owl said, "'pon my word."

'Are men born so, with that white cockade?''

Said the little field-mouse to the old brown rat

Saith the small so snug in his dappled shell, Mowly stretching one cautious horn, As the beetle was incrying by so br sk, Much to his analiship's inward scorn:

"Why does that creature ride by so fast!
Has a fire broke out, to the east or west!"—
"Your Grace, he rides to the sedding-feast."—
"Let the madman go. What I want's rest."

The swallows around the woodman skimmed, Foising and turning on flashing wing; One said; "How liveth this lump of earth? In the air, he can neither som nor spring? "Over the meadows we sweep and dart, Down with the flowers, or up to the skies; While these poor immberers toll and slave, Half-starved, for how our they cutch their fits Quoth the dry rot worm to his artisans in the carpenter's shop, as they bored away: Burk to the sound of the saw and ble: What are tieses creatures at work at—eay?"

From his covered passage a worm looked out, and eyed the beings so busy a "sthead; "I searcely know, my lord; but I think They're making a box to busy their dead!"

Says a butterfly, with his wings of blue All in a finiter of careless joy, As he talks to a dragon-thy over a flower: "Ours is a life, sir, with no alloy."

"What are those black things, row and row, Winding along by the new mows hay?" "That is a funeral," any the dy: "The carpenier buries his son to-day."
